In common with many others, the writer of this article has road with pleasure the glowing accounts of the reat battle of Armageddon was to take place between achievements of different regiments in the late engagement near Williamsburg. The halo thus thrown rister attaches so much importance to the "discovery" to remark that, "the bare fact of such an interpretaof prephecy, having been solemnly published with belief in its verity by an earnest and intelligent inr, sie years before the commencement of the pre ing war, is, when connected with the history of the up to the present time, and the tremendous event apending at Corinth, eminently calculated to pique curiosity, if not to stimulate our faith." The lapse of "six years" between the premulgation of the "dire yeary" and the prospective fulfilment of the prophecy, s regarded by the Register as a sign firant circumstance It may be; but we are sure that we have seen in a book published in the last consury, an interpretation of protheey, setting forth that the second advent of Chris would take place about the year 1866; and there are stores of books on the same subject, by "intelligent in quirers," printed prior to 1856, which present similar de

GEN. PICKET'S BRIGADE-WILLIAMSBURG FIGHT.

CAMP NEAR RICHMOND, May 19, 1862

To the Editor of the Whig. over this battle scene, and the enthusiastic p'eturing of this act of calm courage and that exhibition of patriotic during, can not fail in producing a self-sacrificing loyaletly waited until their comrades have been heard through admiring friends, it is not deemed indelicate by the writer of this article,(a participant in the action,) to present to the public an unadorned statement of the corps com posing the 31, or P.ckett's Brigade, and its participation in the late Williamsburg action. The brigade con sists of exclusively Virginia regiments-being the 8 h 18th, 19 h, and 28 h regiments, and the Lynchburg ar ollery, better known as Latbam's battery, companded at present by Captain Dearing, an accomplished officer and genial gentleman. The 8th, 19th, 18th and 28th regiments, and the artillery, were par-Leipants in the battle of Manassas, and modestly wore the laurels wrested upon that field from an insolent foe, while, opportunity had given to one, (the 8:h) a more recent chaplet in the Leesburg fight. The commanding Seneral was also a son of Virginia, and the name of Pickett was freshly associated as an officer of the late U. S. army, in spirited defiance of British power and ar og mes on the sea shore of the Pacific could not reach him, and w and cprot at best the appreciation of magneticity, or, set ascrifice. With such a chief and subordinate regimes sal commanders, of approved skill and courage, General Johnson and Longstreet had a right to expect of them the prempt acceptance and liquidation of any draught agon patriousm and gallantry, the exigencies of war night demand.

On the morning of the 5th inst., and while the brigade were preparing to continue their march towards Rich uond, the order to "about face" was given, and the brigade moved back to Williamsburg, while random shots in advance plainly indicated that this movement was not a holiday parade or military whim. Halted for awhile n the college yard, we were then moved through the town, while it creased firing and more rapid and contind volleys, satisfied the most sceptical that a battle was ed, which would certainly involve thousands and might necessitate the great issue of South ru inde p nience upon the fields and in the thick woods which cut the olden burg, where, in olden days, the wealth lutellect and courage of old Virginia flocked as to a loved centre. The 34 brigade was soon marched to the grow of the elevation some quarter or half a mile in advance of the town, from which could be plainly heard the incessant rattle of musketry, and seen the "volumed smake, which, thickened by the falling rain, seemed to droop, like the dark drapery of the hearse, over the hidden carnival of death. The regularity and continuance of the dring evinced, beyond doubt, that, while the attack was viscous and unwavering, it was met by a re sistance conscious of strength of position and overpow ering numbers; and deriving from this consciousness weak confidence of victory, which is frequently a quite current counteriol for true courage. Such was the state of the battle when Gen. Pickett, with sold-erly appro heasion of the right time for acting, ordered his entire rigade of infantry to the curtained woods, where patri ons contended against in-roscaries, and right against oppression. In the woods where the $1 marched, the st brigade, under Brigadier General Hill, were gallantly ighting, and winning substantial plaims upon the admi ration and gratitude of their countrymen. The 8:1 Regiment, being the right wing, moved first, being fol. lowed, in comparatively close column, by the 18th, 19.1 and 28 h, in order as named, and, without being balled, were placed in close and immediate collision with an enomy whose protections were equal, if not superior, to regular for lifeations of earth. Though struggling against numbers, and a powerful and skilfully chosen osition, the brigade proved worthy of the old mother demmonwealth, of the great cause of independence and elf-government, of the reputation of the gallant chief whose professional pride was so inextricably involved with that of his brigade, and especially of their own regimental commanders, who had pruned their enthus: asm and educated their natural courage into disciplined valor. As the fight was extended in the woods, and va. led according to exigencies, there are difficulties in pro-

4TH. 28TH REGIMENT-COL ALLEN, This regiment, formerly commanded by Col. Preston and mainly from the tier of countles immediately ad joining the Virginia and Tennessee read, was one of the strongest and best in the State. In the late Williams burg fight, it acted as became itself, and caused many of the invading host to feel a Western bullet. No section of the State is truer, or more loyal, than the Southwest or places a higher estimate upon right and independence During the action, Colonel Allen was brokoned by three persons, who demanded his surrender as he came up to them. The Colonel immediately grasped the musket of and the third taken prisoner. This regiment supported the 19th in its daring charge upon the batteries, and afterwards pursued the fugitive enemy. Its loss was

The Lynchburg Artillery was not directly with the brigade, but behaved most handsomely. The loss of Lieutenant Richardson is deeply fell, and is scarcely reparable. He died as die the brave, and leaves behind him mourning comrades, who will see that his virtues are not easily forgotten.

So closes the recount of the conduct of Pickett's Brigade. With a total loss of near two hundred out of about 1,600 men, it is dicted terrific loss upon the enemy, ty and determined resistance of the invader, essential drove them from their position, and captured, through in this hour of trial.
